Sense and Sensibility Mad Lib 2: The Cold Shoulder

At last he Verb - Past Tense round again, and Verb - Past Tense them both; she Verb - Past Tense up, and pronouncing his name in a tone of affection, held out her Part of Body to him. He approached, and Verb - Present ends in ING himself rather to Elinor than Marianne, as if Verb - Present ends in ING to avoid her Part of Body, and determined not to Verb - Base Form her attitude, inquired in a hurried manner after Mrs. Full Name of a Person, and asked how long they had been in town. Elinor was robbed of all presence of Noun by such an Noun, and was unable to say a Noun. But the feelings of her sister were Adverb expressed. Her Part of Body was crimsoned over, and she exclaimed, in a voice of the Adjective - Ends in EST emotion, " Good God ! Willoughby, what is the meaning of this ? Have you not Verb - Past Tense my letters ? Will you not shake Part of Body with me

He could not then avoid it, but her Noun seemed painful to him, and he held her Part of Body only for a moment. During all this time he was evidently Verb - Present ends in ING for Noun. Elinor watched his Part of Body and saw its expression becoming more Adjective. After a moment's pause, he Verb - Past Tense with calmness.

I did myself the honour of Verb - Present ends in ING in Location Street last Tuesday, and very much Verb - Past Tense that I was not fortunate enough to find yourselves and Mrs. Full Name of a Person at home. My Noun was not lost, I hope

But have you not received my Noun - Plural cried Marianne in the Adjective - Ends in EST anxiety. Here is some mistake I am sure--some Adjective mistake. What can be the meaning of it ? Tell me, Willoughby; for heaven's sake tell me, what is the Noun

He Verb - Past Tense no reply; his Part of Body changed and all his embarrassment returned; but as if, on catching the Part of Body of the young lady with whom he had been previously Verb - Present ends in ING, he felt the necessity of instant exertion, he Verb - Past Tense himself again, and after saying, Yes, I had the pleasure of Verb - Present ends in ING the information of your arrival in Location, which you were so good as to send me, turned Adverb away with a slight bow and joined his friend.

Marianne, now looking dreadfully white, and unable to Verb - Base Form, sunk into her chair, and Elinor, expecting every moment to see her faint, tried to Verb - Base Form her from the observation of others, while Verb - Present ends in ING her with lavender water.

Go to him, Elinor, she cried, as soon as she could Verb - Base Form, and force him to Verb - Base Form to me. Tell him I must Verb - Base Form him again--must Verb - Base Form to him instantly -- I cannot rest--I shall not have a moment's Noun till this is explained--some dreadful misapprehension or other -- Oh go to him this moment

How can that be done ? No, my dearest Marianne, you must Verb - Base Form. This is not the Location for explanations. Wait only till tomorrow
